It's very easy to write modifications, since AMXX has 2 IDE's, one for each scripting language, and you can use those IDE's to edit your modification (mainly AMXX), or you can directly use a small programming IDE, like the one from the original HL1 Source Code. Which version should I use? The original AMX is outdated, so you should use the new AMX2, in order to improve the code. The advantages of this version are: better compiling (and in case you ever need to rebuild the mod, just compile with the new AMX2's executable) and better compatibility with other mods. But if you really want to use the old version, you can build it with the source code from the original HL1, just using the new IDE. How to install? This plugin will require you to have the HL2 source code, which is why you have to download it first, and install it to the HL2 directory. If you don't have the HL2 source code, you can download it at the Steam Workshop website (just click on the workshop button on the Half-Life 2 page, and then select "Browse Workshop" in the left side of the page). How do I use it? The easiest way is to open the AMXX folder, and double click on the AMXX.exe file. Note: It is important to copy the files to the HL2 directory, otherwise they will not run, so just copy the AMXX, AMX, AMXM and AMXS files to the HL2 directory. After that, just open a console window, and run the modification. You will be asked if you want to overwrite your modifications. Just press Y, and you will be able to start playing your mod. How do I configure my mod? First of all, you have to configure which scripting language you want to use. You can use the AMX2 IDE to modify the files, or just use your own programming IDE, and just copy the files to the HL2 directory. Note: If you use the IDE, you should just copy the AMXX, AMX, AMXM and AMXS files to the HL2 directory. This is necessary to configure the AMXX plugin, since the files are compiled and installed in the HL2 directory. It will ask you the directory where you want to save your modification. 82157476af
